

I believe it was a Tuesday. A day like any other.

Mrs Robinson, Meadowcroft's charismatic English teacher, was yet again ensuring both staff and pupil's alike could best appreciate their mind's eye, looking to bestow them with spicier vocab. No wonder it was here, during period 4 at 11:55am, that the Hub's Callum would have a stroke of utter genius. Known for his infectious and high-spirited nature, Callum's thoughts often did wander beyond a lesson's predetermined path (to say the least). Yes, this sometimes led to the odd ill-timed paper plane or crass innuendo... but this time it sparked a compelling question:

"Why don't we have a Newsletter?"

Mrs Robinson and Mr Hunter were dumbfounded. Why didn't we yet have a newsletter!? I mean Meadowcroft School is perhaps the most exciting place on earth, surely deserving of an archive documenting its events and happenings. Therefore, every Monday, a newsletter containing up to date reports of the school's affairs will be published. I mean, why should we at Meadowcroft hog all the fun for ourselves?

Better still, as if willed by destiny itself, the start of our weekly newsletter happens to coincide with the formation of our school's newly appointed student executive team. Referred to as 'Pupil's Voice', the team will be guided by the school's fan favourite teaching assistant: Mr Ridsdale.

The members of this budding bunch are as follows:

Charlie, the nurturer.

Bailey, the 'top boy'.

Neil, the inquisitor.

Jarrood, the well-mannered.

Lewis, the diplomat.

So there we have it. Each newsletter will be a collaboration between Mr Hunter, Meadowcroft's staff and the members of Pupil's Voice. You can expect our first letter newsletter on 25.02.19.

Thank you Callum for such a wonderful suggestion (kinda like that time you got Mr Ridsdale to let you paint his face).

Let the good times roll!
