A ROTHWELL SWIM!

Yet again, for both the Gallery and Primary, Monday had the spirit of a Friday and although pupils were soaked wet through, it wasn't due to Britain's signature weather (go figure). On the 4th of March, our pupils cannonballed into Rothwell's swimming baths, making a collective tsunami or two that may or may not have submerged some of the public (making waves is a tricky business). Mr Panda took his experience in the pool a little too seriously, demonstrating how many laps one could achieve within a 45 minute slot (no Panda has ever swam better). Unfortunately, Mr Shimeld had forgotten his swimming shirt... making it unclear to many whether he was a staff member or pupil... (Sorry man, couldn't resist).

LESSONS TO LASERS!

Another group of pupils revisited our beloved 'Xscape', looking to perfect their laser skills after defeat at the hands of Mr Brennan aka Sargent Brennan (that's right, I did some digging) and Josh. This time Corey took the spot as top dog, reducing his enemy to ash (in his imagination of course, I hear it's quite vivid).

Well done Corey for eliminating Josh and Mr Brennan from their respective podiums (I mean Josh doesn't even like star wars anymore, so how could he ever be deemed the king of a laser based activity? Outrageous, out of the question).

DINOSAUR CHAOS!

Finally, Primary have been diving head first into a book called 'What the dinosaurs did last night' for the duration of last week... Each night, in the cover of darkness, dinosaurs get up to all sorts of mischief and chaos, resulting in parents blaming their unsuspecting children. It was then discovered the dinosaurs had been doing the same in our primary classrooms each evening (yes, this indeed confirms the events of toy story as fact not fiction).
