Reece, our working man, has still been clocking in at 'Games Pit' as part of his work experience on a Friday. This time, Bobby the strategist and Matthew the flamboyant were persuaded to visit their pal Reece in his place of work by an accompanying Miss Edwards. Originally nervous to visit a new locale, the boys overcame their worries to support a long-time friend (you heard me, we're talking toy-story level 'you got a friend in me' type emotion here). Unexpectedly, the manager of the place invited the pair to play an intense game of Ravnica: Inquisition (I'm as confused as you) to test the boy's mettle. Bobby, a born tactician, felt compelled to answer the man's challenge without hesitation.

Matthew, initially sceptical, bravely opted to try his luck and get stuck in. Before long, both Bobby and Matthew had mastered the game, quickly ganging up on a seemingly helpless Miss Edwards (sorry miss, 'live by the sword, die by the sword'). However, when I say seemingly, I mean do mean seemingly. Donning the nickname 'teach', she proved there was life in the old teach left, ultimately thrashing the boys with a landslide victory (sorry boys, 'live by the sword, die by the sword'). All in all, the guy's loved it... Reece demonstrating that being a working man certainly has its perks!
