"IF YOU COULD HAVE A POWER..." PART 1 - ARTICLE

SHAZAM! To round off a particularly productive term (gotta love exams), as well as give our pupils a memorable but temporary farewell for the Easter period (you're lying if you haven't already eyed up what type of chocolate egg you're gonna demolish), both pupils from the Works and the Hub took a trip to the cinema. The movie? A Superhero flick called SHAZ... oh wait, I already blew it.

Now, we're all familiar with our movie-goer types. You've got your talker (I'm looking at you, Jake) providing a relentless running commentary of his thoughts and ideas for the good folks of row G, F and E to experience (nice one, lad). You've got your silencer (that's right, Josh), consistently shushing any trace of noise pollution not emanating from the screen indiscriminately and within a whopping 2 metre radius (P.S, this is a boat load of fun when your talker and silencer are only 2 seats apart). You've got your chuckler (you know it's you, Bobby) filling the screen with bellow after bellow of chortles and howls no matter the joke thrown his way (I'll give it to ya though Bobby, the film was pretty funny).

With the film depicting a boy turned hero, readily able to muster a concoction of different powers whenever he belts the word 'SHAZAM', it was safe to say our pupil's imaginations were set ablaze (Hell, so was mine). Like a virus (but like, a good one), a question spread amongst our pupils minds; "If you could have a power, what would it be?" Bailey quickly wished for telekinesis, the ability to move objects with nothing but his noggin. And so what if it's just to scare corner shopkeepers by inexplicably floating lion bars out of their establishments without a perpetrator in sight (we all have our calling).

Nick, originally certain of his, chose the ability to faze through solid matter, making him the perfect vault robber (or so he thought...).
