

"I PROPER LOVE PENGUINS" – ARTICLE

*If you haven't already been made aware via David Attenborough's recent slew of tear-jerking documentaries (I've never loved Walrus more), our planet's environment is on the brink.*

So no, if you think this is another cute little puff piece about 'what power you'd choose if you could' (check out issue 5), well think again. On Friday the 26th of April, Meadowcroft School's Hub celebrated its own belated 'Earth Day'. Spearheaded by the exuberant and fantastic Mr Hunter (totally not the author of this piece by the way...), and assisted by the school's very own Mr Hinman (our science guy), 'Earth Day' was captured in a poignant but impactful presentation during one of our routine assemblies.

Naturally, the presentation started with Mr Hunter dramatically approaching a bin he'd prepared (with boundless poise and grace, I might add), tightly clasping an empty plastic bottle. Once the attention of the room was seized (due to such sheer showmanship, I presume), Mr Hunter ever so gradually loosened his grip to further foster an overwhelming sense of tension and purpose (God, this guy's good). As the bottle finally fell, rustling in the plastic in-line of the bin previously mentioned... "WELCOMETO EARTH DAY" boomed from his hyperbolic gob...
